To whom it may concern,

I am writing in recommendation of Jon Perryman, a long-time contributor to The Tech Interactive. Jon is a vital member of our exhibits team. We count on him to keep the electronics in our exhibits up and running. He brings a tremendous amount of competence and passion to his work. He is especially strong with respect to anything that has to do with robotics and A.I. He is a self-starter. He anticipates problems and works to fix them before they erupt. He perseveres until he has solved whatever challenge he is facing.

Two examples of Jon's problem-solving skills leap to mind. In one case, we had a program called "Solve the Fall" that had a complicated exhibit-visitor interface. After staff made several unsuccessful attempts at making it functional, Jon developed a solution that successfully kept the exhibit functional with minimal effort. In the other, Jon did a complete overhaul and upgrade to our beloved robot, Buster. He helped Buster transform from being an RC car (you could buy from Walmart) to being a Robot. It was a great change that Jon made happen.

I'm glad that Jon works with us here at The Tech Interactive, but I also hope he gets a chance to share his gifts with other companies that need his skills. He is dedicated, competent and persevering. If you need someone like that in your organization, I hope you will give Jon an opportunity.

Sincerely yours,

Tim Ritchie
President/CEO
